The world is increasingly becoming borderless. There are no firewalls against intensifying global competition. The current paradigm in Education addresses the problems of yesterday through limited focus. This paradigm now itself needs to change. An individual today needs to learn and adapt to the global perspective and this can only be acquired through International Education. The students and working professionals today need to be very careful about the management courses they choose. Today there are very few Institutes in India which offer such relevant courses to prepare the youth for the challenges ahead. Such quality global courses can now be availed even by Distance Learning programmes. The Industry's credo today is 'We need Global Managers, not MBA's'.
